

Lentorre - Surely one of Kenya's Finest Photography Destinations!

30 September 2026

by Inger Vandyke

Flamingos flying over the wildly beautiful shores of Lake Magadi (image by Inger Vandyke)

Deep in the wilderness of southern Kenya, nestled on a hillock between two incredible soda lakes, lies the stunning, exclusive lodge Lentorre.

Barely visible from anywhere, yet a haven of exclusivity in the wild, Lentorre is a centrepiece of photographic luxury at the heart of the community-based Olkiramatian Conservancy.

Many years ago, the elders of the local Olkiramatian Maasai sat around their campfires listening to the bellowing of distant lions, yet by the turn of the last century, most of these iconic sounds had disappeared from their world. Their nighttime serenades by nature had almost disappeared. This prompted a small group of elders to divide their land and create a model in which the expansion of human interests would not come at the expense of the wildlife living in the same realm.

For centuries, the local Maasai migrated from one side of the Ewaso Nyiro River to the other, using the grazing lands that grew with the rains. That same river now forms a boundary to the conservancy, and the local Maasai work to keep the grasslands abutting the river open, providing the wildlife with enough room to migrate in tune with the community, a move that significantly reduced the incidence of human-wildlife conflict that accompanies conservation projects that have grown within communities.

As a result, the conservancy now has increased numbers of both game and predators, with Kenya's second-highest densities of lions outside the Maasai Mara.

At the heart of this thriving conservancy is Lentorre, a lodge that was set up specifically for photography and an exclusive, small number of guests at any one time. With just six villas that can accommodate up to 16 guests, it is intimate, beautiful, and features understated luxury at every turn.

The journey (image by Inger Vandyke)

A stay at Lentorre usually involves you having to make some very difficult and unique holiday decisions – do you spend all your time in their comprehensively outfitted photographic hide? Visit the local Maasai community? Go on safari? Take an exhilarating, no-doors helicopter flight over a spectacular soda lake? Or relax and enjoy your own private plunge pool in your villa, surrounded by the sights and sounds of the bush. It was a tough call each day, but Wild Images recently answered it.

We were initially intrigued by the hide and aerial photography at Lentorre but, after our stay, we found ourselves beguiled by the opportunities to go on safari, visit Lake Magadi's flamingos, the daytime photography from the hide and the warmest hospitality of the Maasai team, welcoming you to their lands.

The Lodge

Lentorre has just six standalone chalets. Four cater to couples/singles, while two cater to families. Each of them has its own private plunge pool and is designed to leave a light architectural footprint on the land. Enjoy natural ventilation while staying protected from mosquitoes, lying in bed, listening to the sounds of the bush, with every whim catered for by a discreet but helpful small group of devoted staff. Each villa offers a unique outlook. No neighbours can be seen, leaving you with the feeling that you may just be the only two people on earth.

The stunning villas of Lentorre (image by Lentorre Lodge)

A stay at Lentorre usually involves you having to make some very difficult and unique holiday decisions – do you spend all your time in their comprehensively outfitted photographic hide? Visit the local Maasai community? Go on safari? Take an exhilarating, no-doors helicopter flight over a spectacular soda lake? Or relax and enjoy your own private plunge pool in your villa, surrounded by the sights and sounds of the bush. It was a tough call each day, but Wild Images recently answered it.

We were initially intrigued by the hide and aerial photography at Lentorre but, after our stay, we found ourselves beguiled by the opportunities to go on safari, visit Lake Magadi's flamingos, do daytime photography from the hide, and enjoy the warmest hospitality of the Maasai team, welcoming you to their lands.

The Lodge

Lentorre has just six standalone chalets. Four cater to couples/singles, while two cater to families. Each of them has its own private plunge pool and is designed to leave a light architectural footprint on the land. Enjoy natural ventilation while staying protected from mosquitoes, lying in bed, listening to the sounds of the bush, with every whim catered for by a discreet but helpful small group of devoted staff. Each villa offers a unique outlook. No neighbours can be seen, leaving you with the feeling that you may just be the only two people on earth.

Looking towards Tanzania from one of the private plunge pools of Lentorre (image by Lentorre)

At the back of the hide are beds for you to sleep, each made up with blankets and crisp white linen; there is a flushing toilet and even a bar fridge stocked with alcoholic and non-alcoholic drinks. Around 10 pm, one of the staff brings hot tea and coffee and biscuits for those who want a snack before bed, or for the hardcore folk who want to crack an all-nighter waiting for the myriad of nocturnal creatures that visit the hide nightly.

Initially, we were part of the crowd that did the night shift, but eventually we took some nights off to sleep and enjoy the hide in the daytime.

Even with shorter visits, life in Lentorre at night is wonderful. Over five nights we had great encounters with leopards, caracals, striped hyenas, spotted hyenas, genets, scrub hares, white-tailed mongooses, and jackals. On one of the all-night sessions, we were visited by a pride of lions who enthralled all of us by drinking from the waterhole and also playing, jumping on the roof of the hide!

One of the alpha males in Lentorre's Olive Baboon families has an unusually twisted snout, probably from a fight when he was younger. It kind of adds to his charisma, so I jokingly called him "Twistie" (image by Inger Vandyke)

From a distance, the wildlife visiting the hide during the day doesn't seem frequent or visible, but once you actually spend daylight hours inside, you can be rewarded with numerous lovely birds and mammals that come to the waterhole to drink and escape the heat of the day.

Bare-faced Goaway Bird visiting Lentorre's hide during the daytime (image by Inger Vandyke)

Safari

We visited Lentorre when the grasslands were overgrown, so it was difficult to see many animals on safari. I had hoped to see Fringe-eared Oryx, one of those mythical animals that are a highlight of any wildlife lover's safari. They have been recorded at Lentorre but were sadly absent during our visit. We did, however, see some lovely giraffes, dikdiks, zebras and the usual impalas.

A Red-billed Oxpecker on the neck of a giraffe on safari at Lentorre (image by Inger Vandyke)

Flamingos!

Like any photographer, I find flamingos an avian extravaganza. I don't know what it is about flamingos; I can never see too many of them, and even though I have been on countless visits to Africa, countless safaris, countless birding trips, watching flocks of thousands of flamingos wading around a lake right before your eyes, to me anyway, is always a highlight.

We visited the shoreline of Lake Magadi to photograph flamingos on this trip, and although the weather gods weren't exactly shining in our favour, we still managed to capture some lovely images of these quirky birds in the red soda lake.

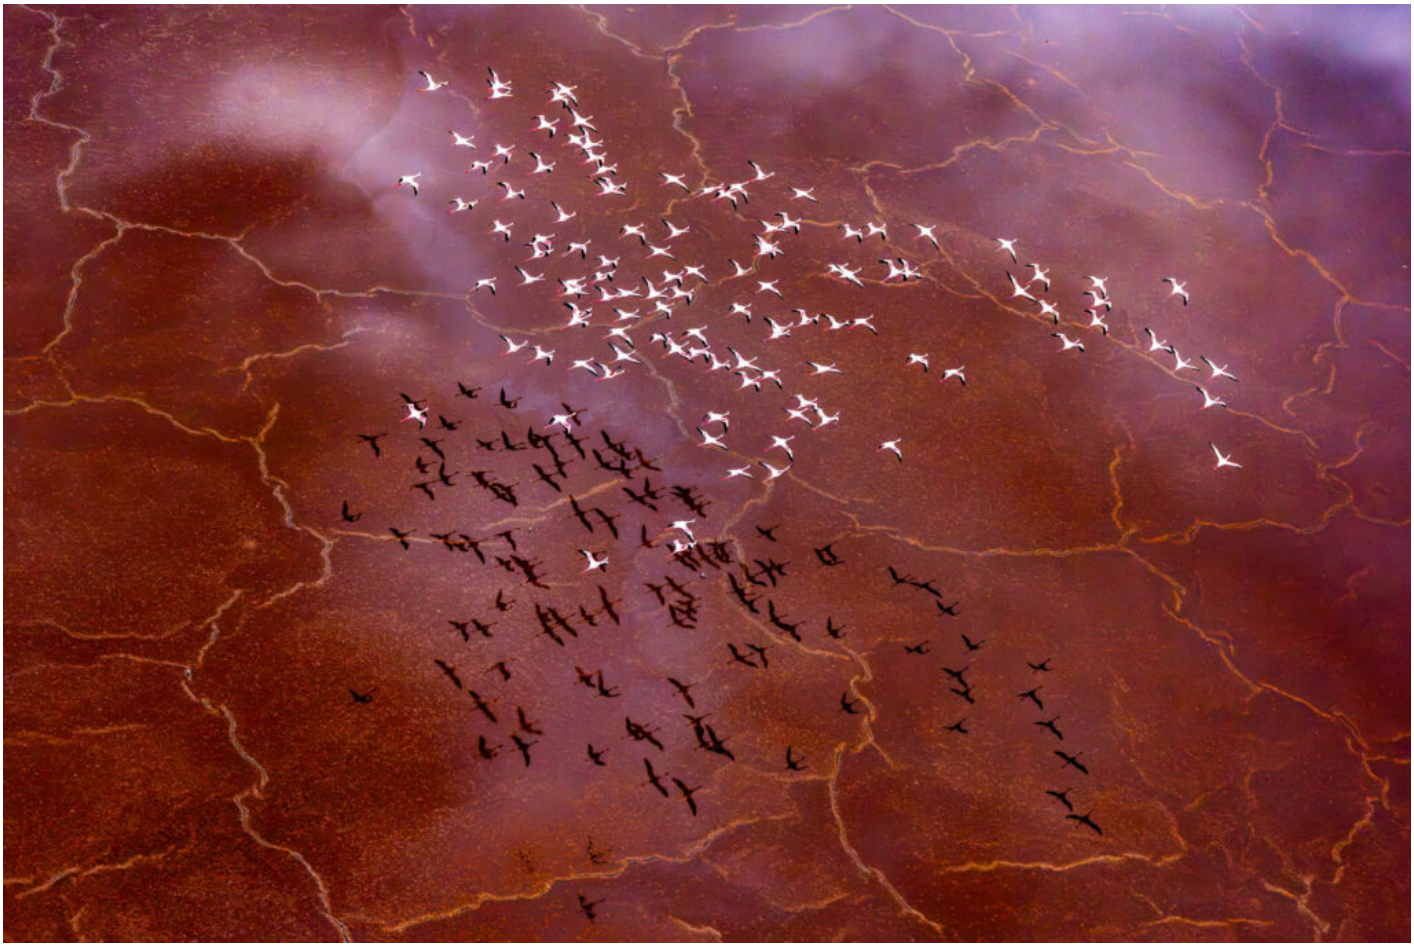

A pair of Greater Flamingos having a stoush (image by Inger Vandyke)

What surprised me, though, were the other birds along the lake shoreline. We also had lovely encounters with Yellow-billed Storks, Great White Pelicans, and even dainty Chestnut-banded Plovers during our visit.

Aerial Photography

Perhaps the most stunning images that drew us to Lentorre were the sublime photos from helicopter flights over the nearby lakes of Natron and Magadi.

Across Kenya, lake flooding from climate change is creating a huge problem for the vast flocks of flamingos I mentioned above. The excess water is altering ecosystems in many Kenyan lakes to the point where the tiny invertebrates flamingos rely on for food can no longer thrive. This translates into fewer numbers in these once-huge flocks and a dramatic shift in the avifauna in places like Lake Bogoria, which used to be home to several hundred thousand Greater and Lesser Flamingos.

Flamingos in pink (image by Inger Vandyke)

Thankfully, the vivid soda lakes of Natron and Magadi are not as affected by this phenomenon, and when you fly over each in a helicopter with no doors, it is both adrenaline-fuelled and so photographically spectacular that, during our first flight, I literally cried at the beauty of it all.

Flying solo (image by Inger Vandyke)

Both lakes are within minutes by air from Lentorre, with Natron perhaps just a few minutes further from the lodge than Lake Magadi.

Flying over both lakes is, at once, both spectacular and wildly expensive. For those seeking one of the most thrilling photographic experiences of their career, however, they are completely and utterly worth the money.

The eye of Magadi (image by Inger Vandyke)

You would think these places were just lakes. They aren't. Each one transports you to another world of salt and sulphur, to the point where you feel like you are flying over the surface of Mars instead of something that exists here on Earth.

Interspersed with swirls, crystals, pans, shorelines, and even factories are large flocks of birds, including flamingos, pelicans, and storks. In fact, one of my favourite images from all the hours we spent flying is featured here. I called it "The Terning Circle" because that tiny circle of white birds flying is actually a circle of Gull-billed Terns feeding on Lake Magadi.

The Terning Circle. A circle of Gull-billed Terns flies over one of Magadi's incredible lake formations (image by Inger Vandyke)

You cannot imagine how beautiful these flights are. The colours, the wildlife and even the transits to each take your breath away.

En route to the lakes, you fly directly over Maasai lands, where you can see Maasai bomas, herders, and even children on their way home from school waving at you from the helicopter.

A Maasai herder at sunset (image by Inger Vandyke)

The long grasses we experienced on safari gave way to aerial views of elephants, giraffes, zebras, and we even flew alongside a Kori Bustard, the heaviest flying bird on earth.

A dazzle of Zebras running across Lentorre's plains at sunset (image by Inger Vandyke)

Each feature amounted to some of the most extraordinary aerial photography I have ever done in my career.

At the end of our trip, I jokingly told our wonderful pilot, Max, that in my next life I'd come back as him.

Max! (image by Inger Vandyke)

Photography

So how do you make the most of your visit to Lentorre? Believe it or not, photography there isn't always as easy as the photos suggest. Night photography has ISO challenges, helicopter flights have focus challenges, and the waters in each lake are ever-shifting.

We have written an "Insider Guide" for guests who book their stay at Lentorre through us. We would be happy to give you a first-hand perspective on how to make the most of your photography during your stay.

To add a Lentorre stay to your trip to Africa, please contact us to check availability.

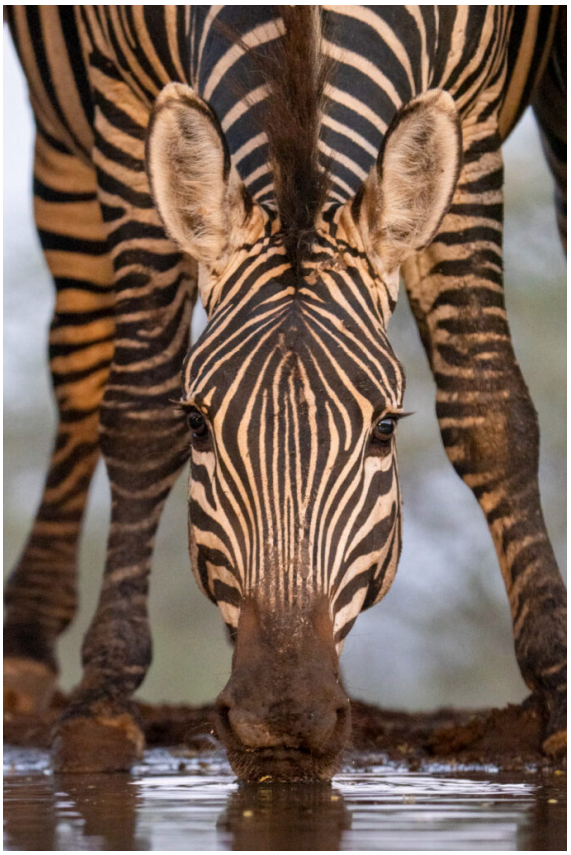

We look forward to sending you on one of Africa's most sublime photographic experiences.

Elephant mother with her baby. They hide in dense bushes in Lentorre but you can sometimes see their foot prints in the clay nearby (image by Inger Vandyke)

Zebras come to drink in the evening at Lentorre's waterhole (image by Inger Vandyke)

Up close and personal with a drinking zebra at Lentorre (image by Inger Vandyke)

The simple beauty of a solo Zebra drinking at night (image by Inger Vandyke)

Yellow-billed Storks engaging in an aerial battle at Lake Magadi (image by Inger Vandyke)

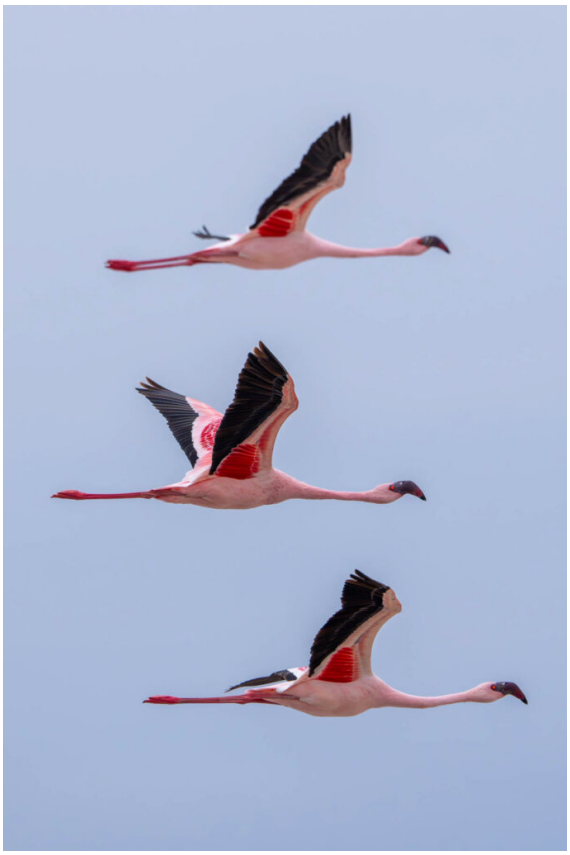

A White-tailed Mongoose with its youngster (image by Inger Vandyke)

Some of Lake Magadi's formations look like you are fling over another planet and this one reminded me of the eye of a gecko (image by Inger Vandyke)

The journey (image by Inger Vandyke)

A trio of Lesser Flamingoes in flight over Lake Magadi (image by Inger Vandyke)

Twistie portrait (image by Inger Vandyke)

Twistie looking annoyed by a visiting wasp (image by Inger Vandyke)

And out of the dust of night, rose a Striped Hyena (image by Inger Vandyke)

Striped Hyena silhouette (image by Inger Vandyke)

Wild encounters with Striped Hyena at Lentorre (image by Inger Vandyke)

Striped Hyena is the most common Hyena seen at Lentorre (image by Inger Vandyke)

A Striped Hyena dribbles after taking a drink in Lentorre's waterhole (image by Inger Vandyke)

"I might just put my feet in the water to cool off" (image by Inger Vandyke)

Striped Hyena drinking (image by Inger Vandyke)

Striped Hyena reflection (image by Inger Vandyke)

Pink and green (image by Inger Vandyke)

Watching flocks of flamingos flying over the salt swirls of Magadi is mesmerising (image by Inger Vandyke)

Pink and green is the scene (image by Inger Vandyke)

A flock of Lesser Flamingos flies over an otherworldly swirl of pink in the green waters of Lake Magadi (image by Inger Vandyke)

The pink tide (image by Inger Vandyke)

Pretty in pink in Lake Magadi (image by Inger Vandyke)

Light catches the ears of a Scrub Hare (image by Inger Vandyke)

A solo Giraffe from the air (image by Inger Vandyke)

A young Olive Baboon visits Lentorre's waterhole during the day (image by Inger Vandyke)

Magical Lake Natron and its flamingo flocks (image by Inger Vandyke)

Natron flamingo abstract (image by Inger Vandyke)

A male leopard takes a night time drink (image by Inger Vandyke)

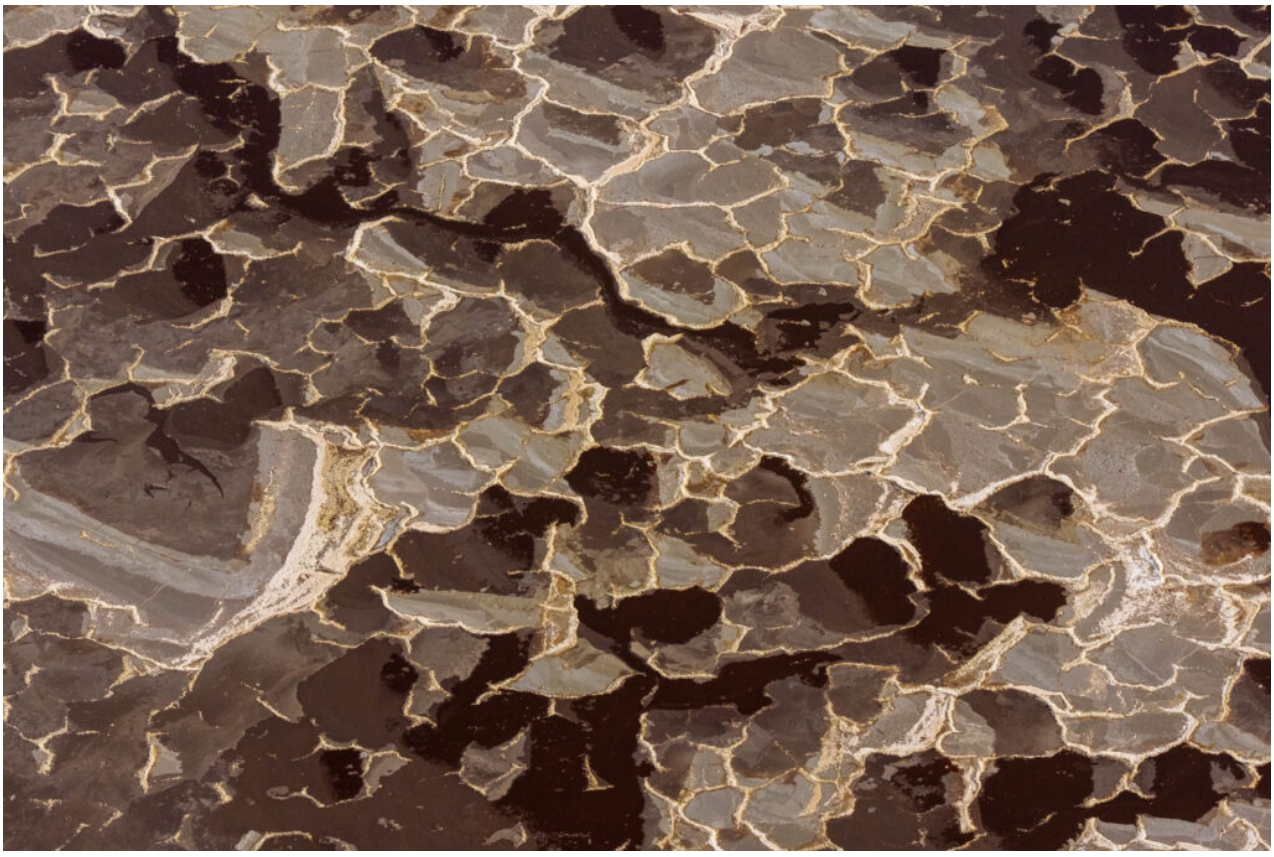

Magadi 'seashell' (image by Inger Vandyke)

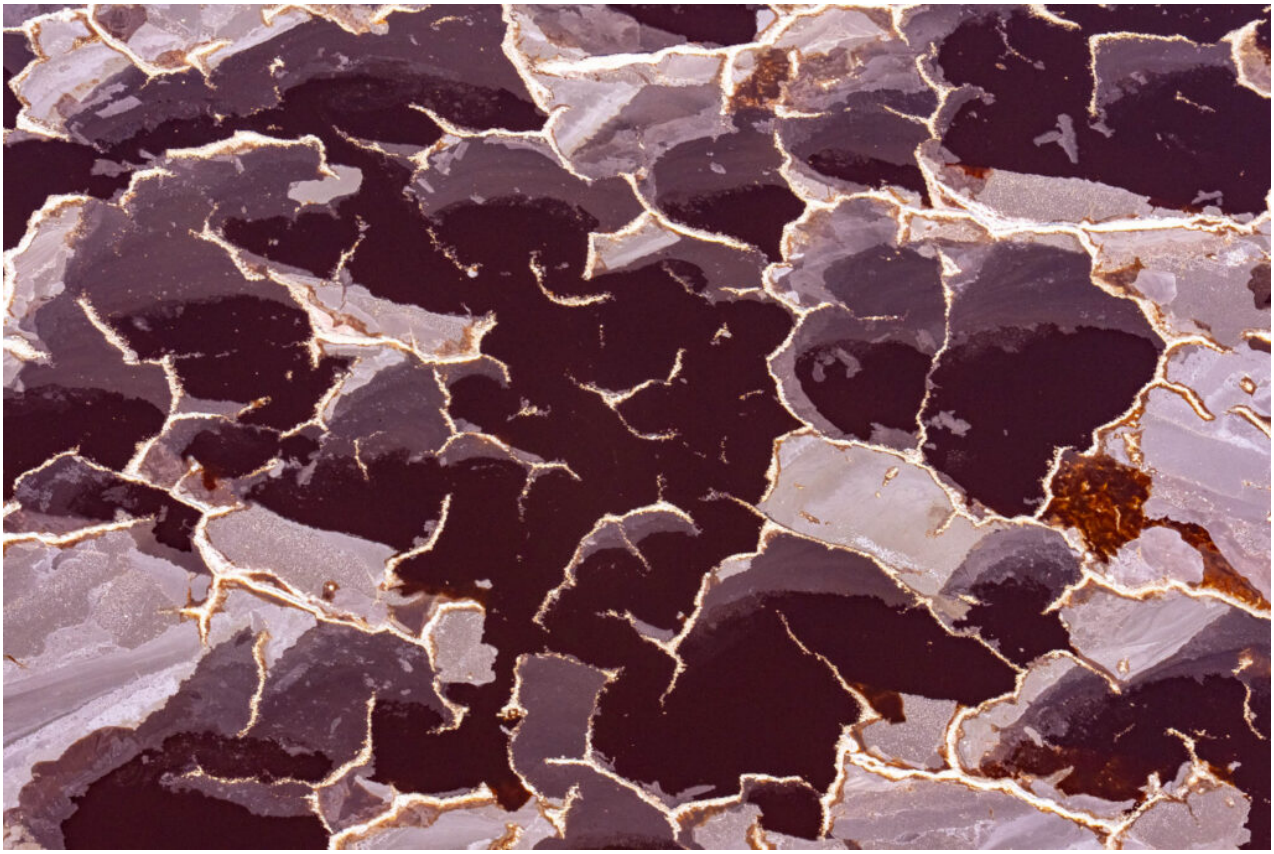

Magadi has many wild formations but my favourites were these ones that looked like seashells from the sky (image by Inger Vandyke)

Flamingo abstract at Lake Magadi (image by Inger Vandyke)

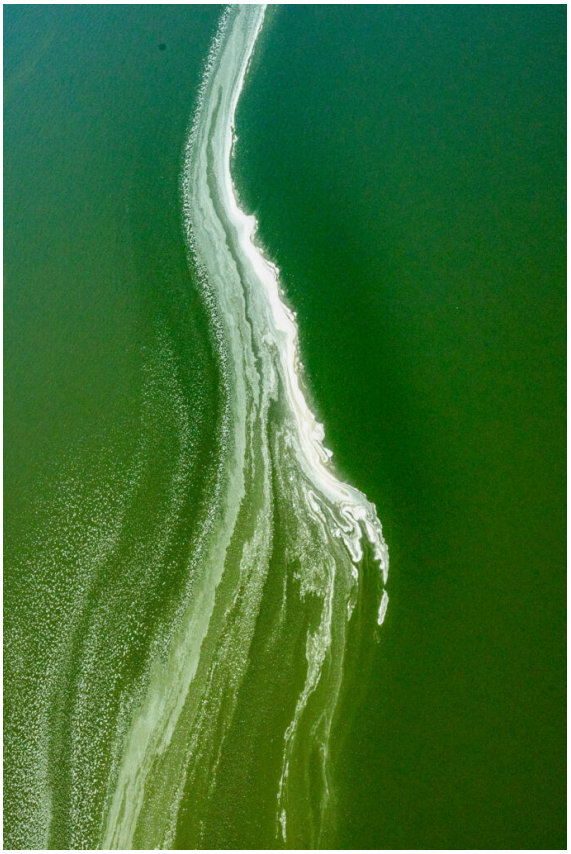

Magadi abstract (image by Inger Vandyke)

Magadi maroons (image by Inger Vandyke)

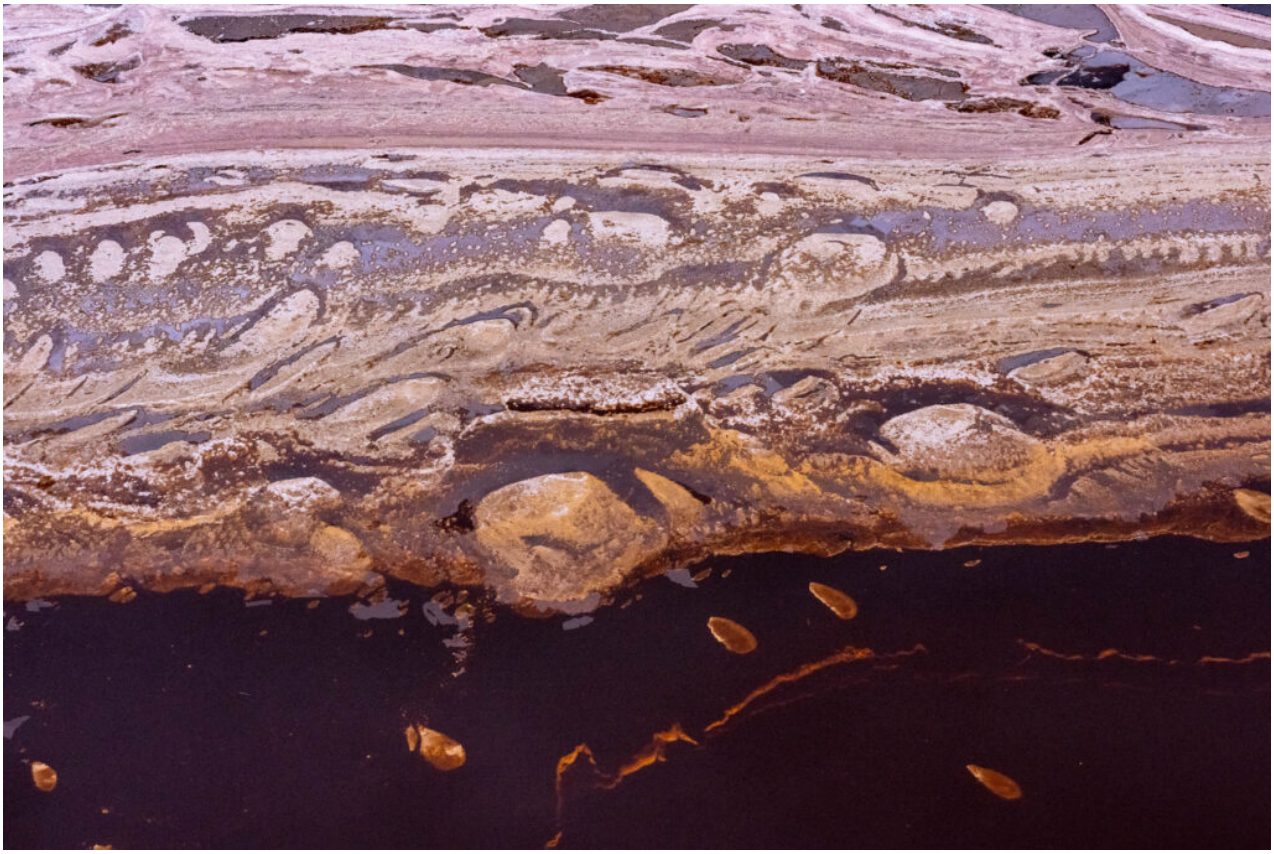

Two Greater Flamingoes hold their heads high in a flock of Lesser Flamingoes (image by Inger Vandyke)

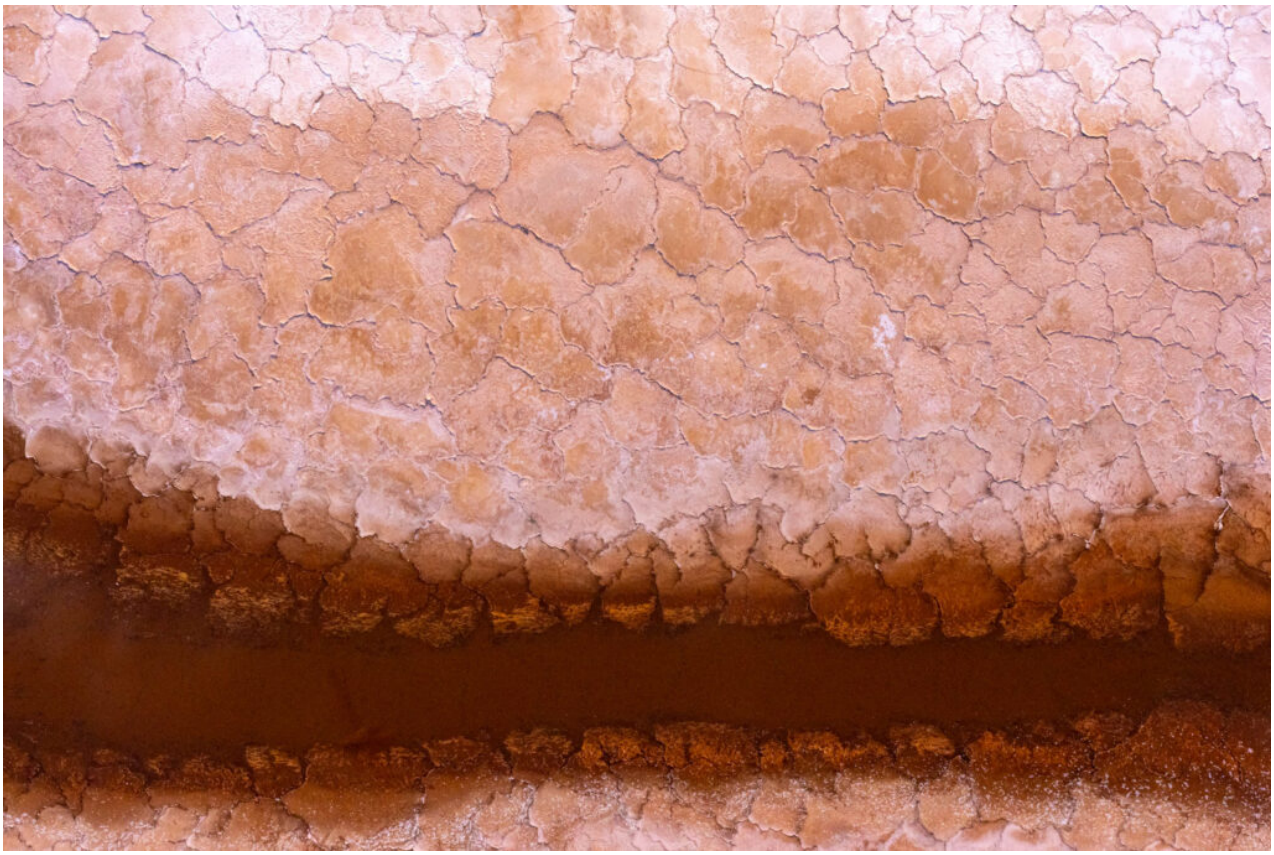

Swirls of green in Magadi (image by Inger Vandyke)

Magadi abstract (image by Inger Vandyke)

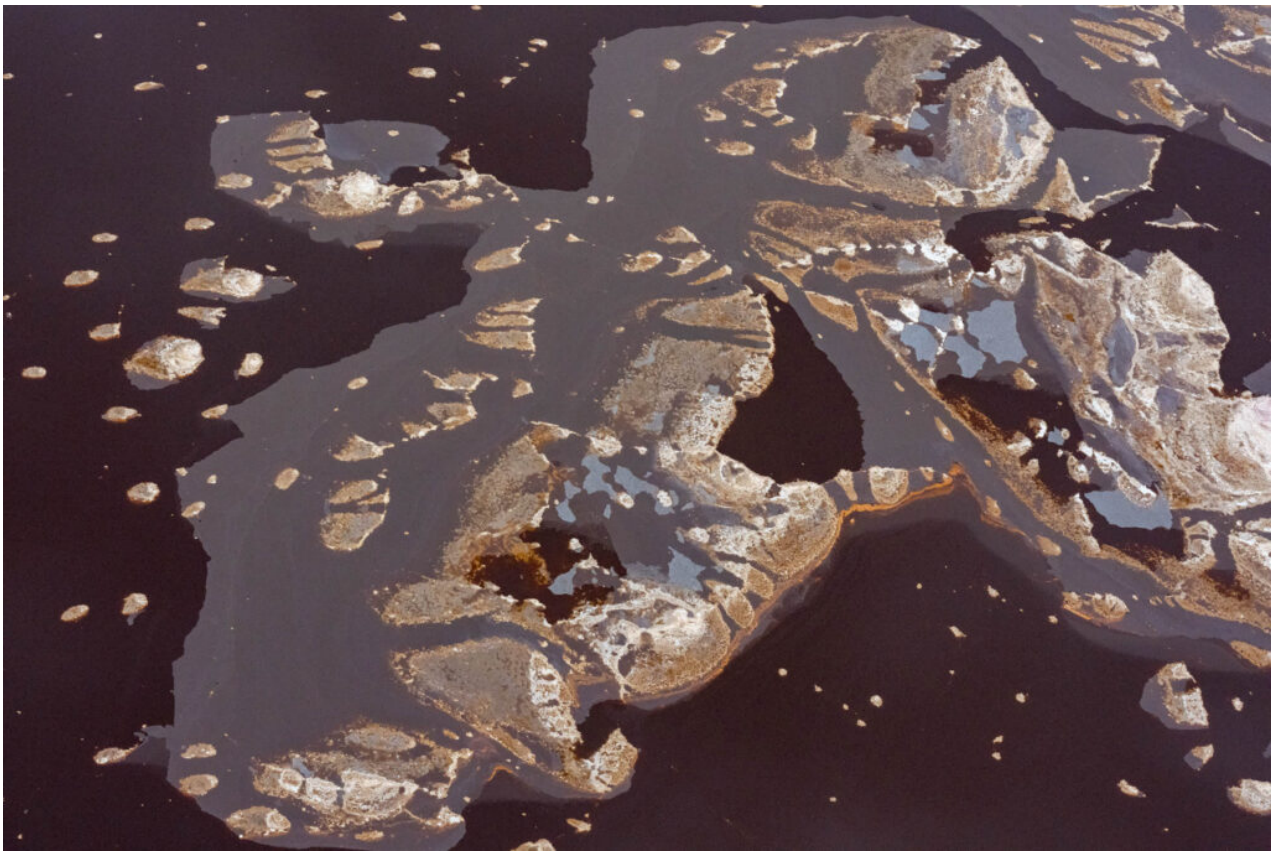

Am I on Mars? (image by Inger Vandyke)

A salt channel in Magadi (image by Inger Vandyke)

Details of Magadi's pink salt (image by Inger Vandyke)

There are so many beautiful and fascinating formations in Magadi (image by Inger Vandyke)

Magadi Blues (image by Inger Vandyke)

Seashells in the sky (image by Inger Vandyke)

A Magadi 'seashell' in mauve and navy (image by Inger Vandyke)

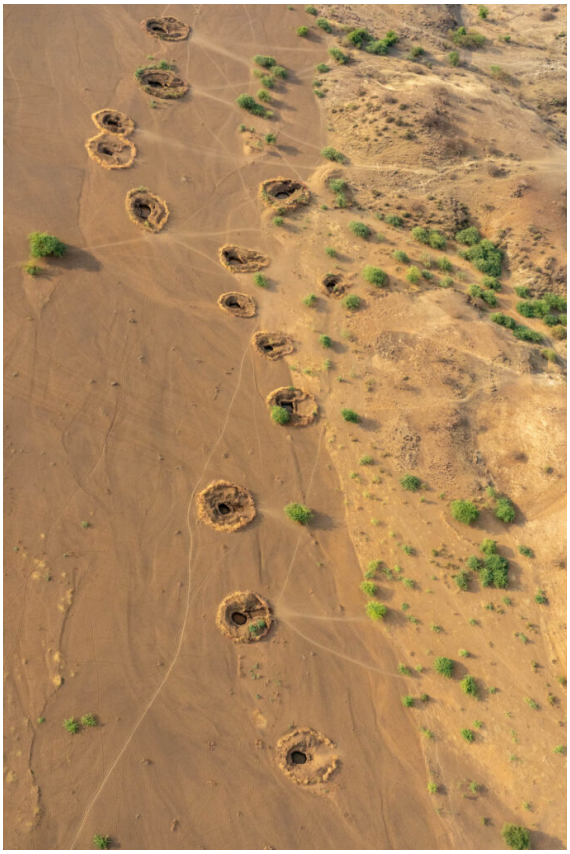

Magadi flamingo abstract. When you are constantly seeing so much beauty, you can feel overwhelmed (image by Inger Vandyke)

Flamingoes flying over the wildly beautiful shores of Lake Magadi (image by Inger Vandyke)

The 'shells' of Magadi (image by Inger Vandyke)

A line of Maasai wells seen from the sky (image by Inger Vandyke)

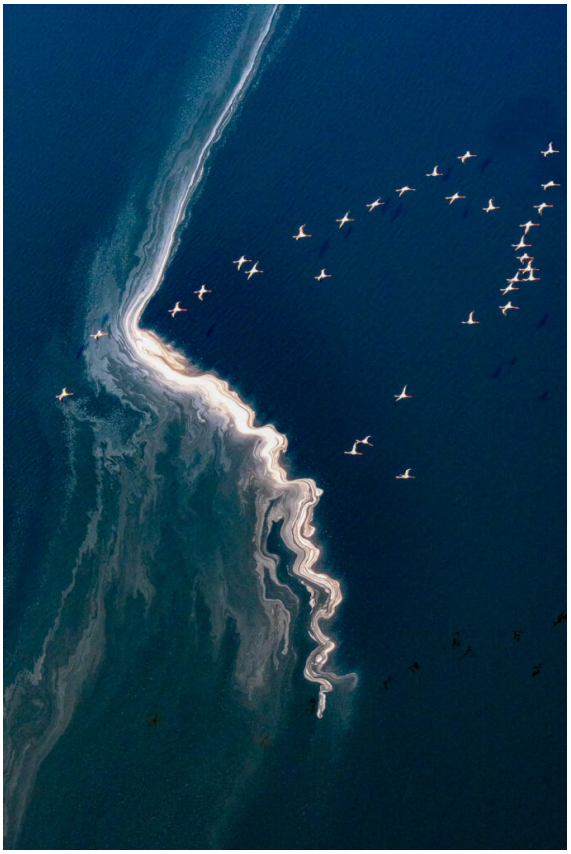

Lesser Flamingo faces (image by Inger Vandyke)

Light catches a beautiful female leopard taking a drink (image by Inger Vandyke)

Leopard (image by Inger Vandyke)

Lake Natron in navy (image by Inger Vandyke)

Great White Pelican flock (image by Inger Vandyke)

Great White Pelicans on Lake Natron (image by Inger Vandyke)

Greater Flamingo pair (image by Inger Vandyke)

Green and brown in Magadi (image by Inger Vandyke)

Impala lineup at Lentorre (image by Inger Vandyke)

A threesome of Impala (image by Inger Vandyke)

Giraffe shadows (image by Inger Vandyke)

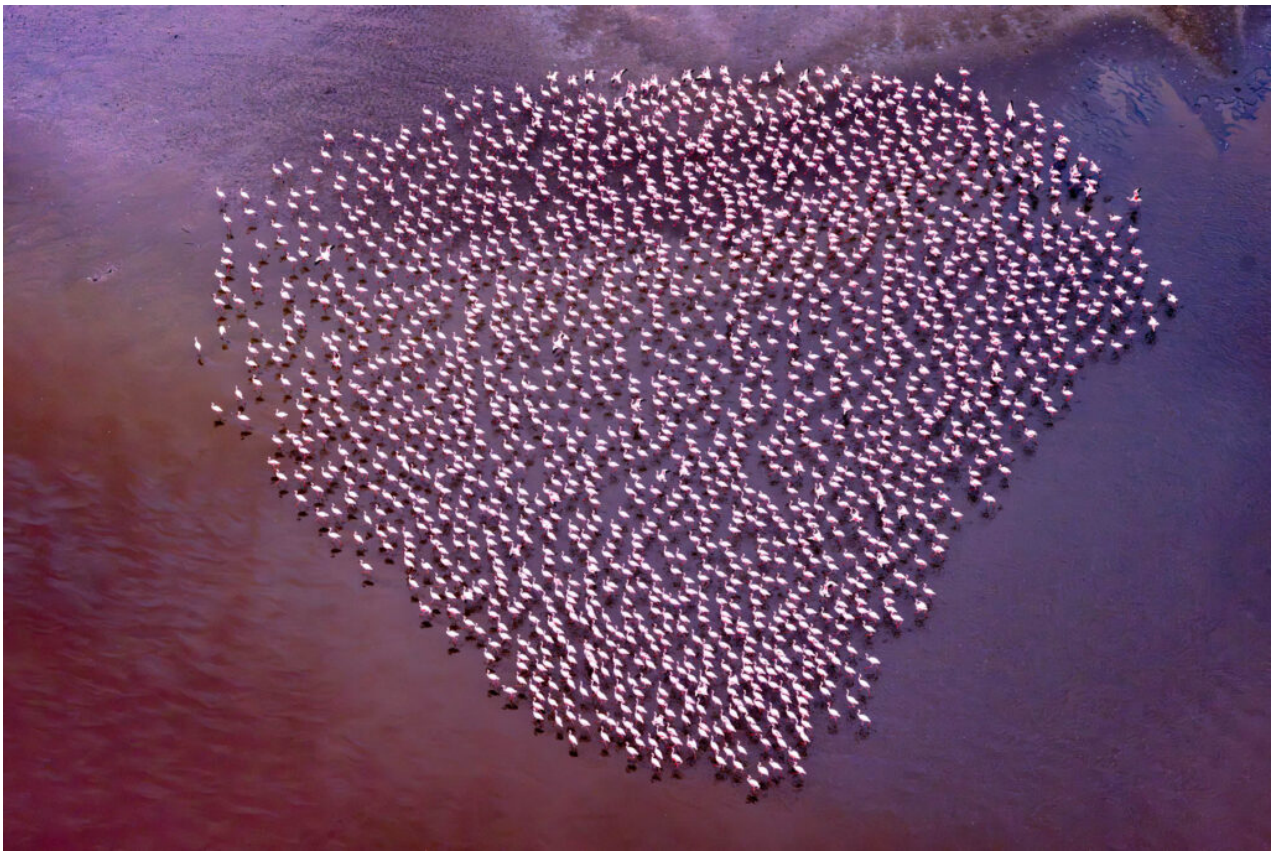

Flying over the marshes (image by Inger Vandyke)

A pair of Lesser Flamingos takes flight (image by Inger Vandyke)

Flamingos everywhere! (image by Inger Vandyke)

For the love of flamingos (image by Inger Vandyke)

An elephant family seen from the sky (image by Inger Vandyke)

Elephant mother with her baby. They hide in dense bushes in Lentorre but you can sometimes see their foot prints in the clay nearby (image by Inger Vandyke)

The angels of the dust (image by Inger Vandyke)

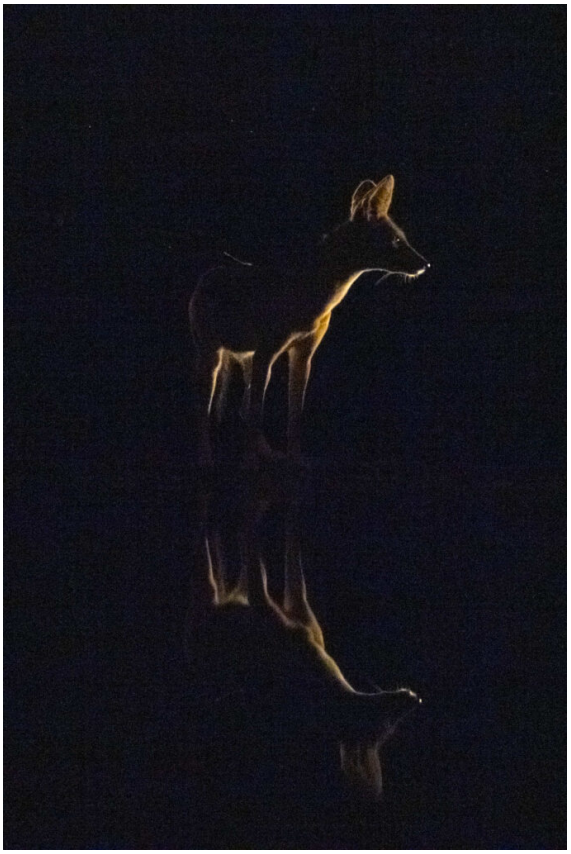

Common Genet (image by Inger Vandyke)

Chestnut-banded Plover at Lake Magadi (image by Inger Vandyke)

If you are really lucky at Lentorre you might see a visiting Caracal (image by Inger Vandyke)

Silhouette of a Black-backed Jackal (image by Inger Vandyke)

Black-backed Jackal in different light (image by Inger Vandyke)

Black-backed Jackal taking a drink (image by Inger Vandyke)

Impala line up to drink (image by Inger Vandyke)

Leopard silhouette (image by Inger Vandyke)